"Cisco will move the RIR role from a software layer to the hardware layer" Last week, the U.S. Commerce Department added a clarification to the text of the final version of the 2011 National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA). The US Commerce Department is currently in the process of reviewing its policy for potential export restrictions of items connected to the security and defense sectors. In that process, the department has made a series of clarifications to the text of the final version of the National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA) of 2011. These clarifications include items like that of the Department of Defense (DOD) ability to restrict technologies that contain intellectual property from being used for any of its programs. On 27 December, the DOD released a request for information from the President's Office of Science and Technology Policy (OSTP) on the review of its policies. This request comes at a time when the Commerce Department is looking at a "course correction" of sorts to ensure that items that would be restricted are more clearly designated as covered items. For example, last year's NDAA made it so that DOD could deny DOD-funded research or development or allow only research or development done under supervision of the DOD into a domain related to space or cyber that would directly affect national security, among other things. Also, under the final version of the NDAA, the Commerce Department had restricted export of unclassified hardware products that contained intellectual property, or those that contained defense information. This was a change from 2010, when the Commerce Department had not made similar changes regarding the restriction of use of intellectual property in export of unclassified items. However, the Commerce Department also stated in January 2012 that "Cisco will move the RIR role from a software layer to the hardware layer." This represents a departure from what was in Section 1029 (b) of the NDAA, which said that products shipped to the Defense Department contained "no secret intellectual property" and "all content on cards, storage media, or any form of other end item is in the public domain." A good overview of the new guidelines in place can be found here. The Commerce Department has more than one task at hand: in addition to the review of its export policy, the Commerce Department is reviewing the benefits of mobile payment services. In that review, the Department is looking at all activities related to billing, access, and payment, that would be performed by telecom carriers, banks, and value
